Syn. gelinde, sanft, sachte, leise, gemach, glimpflich In the words gelinde, sanft, sachte, leise, the effect denoted is a slight touch or contact, in gemach a slight movement. Gemach geben signifies "not to hurry" Das Gelinde and das Sanfte affects the feelings, das Leise, the hearing. Das Gelinde from the slightness of the contact gives merely no painful or a less painful sensation, das Sanfte produces at the same time an agreeable one Thus, figuratively one would not say gelinde, but sanfte Liebkosungen; for it is intended that they should be agreeable, on the other hand, one would say gelinde Strafen of such as are not intended to be too severe Glimpflich implies more especially humanity and kindness

Syn gelingen, gerat(h)en, einſchlagen, glucken When chance favours, or outward circumstances bring about, the accomplishment of what is attempted or intended, we use glucken. But when the success proceeds from the judicious choice of the means or depends upon our own skill or prudence, we use gelingen. Gerat(h)en and einſchlagen are said of the thing or work itself, gelingen principally of the means employed. Einſchlagen implies a greater degree of uncertainty in the issue, a greater effect of chance than gerat(h)en. A painter may say, Dieſes Gemalde iſt mir wohl gerat(h)en, but not, es iſt gut eingeſchlagen.

Syn irre, unſinnig, ſinnlos, verrückt, wahnſinnig, wahnwitzig Irre is used of one whose ideas, during a state of illness, are void of any inward connection among themselves. Unſinnig and ſinnlos indicate a deprivation of the use of the understanding and senses, occasioned by any violent passion; in the Unſinnigen, however, this privation begins with the understanding, whence it spreads its baneful effects over the senses, with the Sinnloſen it at once stuns the senses, and thereby arrests the functions of the understanding — Unſinnigkeit, Verrücktheit, Wahnſinn, and Wahnwitz differ from each other by their duration. Der Unſinnige finds himself in a transitory state, which vanishes with its short-lived cause, whereas the condition of the Wahnſinnigen and Wahnwitzigen is permanent Der Verrückte is distinguished from both the latter in this, that he lives in a continual waking dream. Wahnſinn implies the entire bereavement of the use of the understanding, in which a man takes that to be really true which he merely imagines Wahnwitz manifests itself by a profusion of ideas; but as they are unconnected and confused, they are often absurd The Wahnwitzige is talkative, his ideas are extremely mutable, the Wahnſinnige will often continue quiet and apparently void of thought.

Syn. Kaldaunen, Eingeweide, Gedarme, Getrose Kaldaunen (related to the Greek χολάς) is used only of slaughtered animals and in culinary language; Eingeweide, on the contrary, is said likewise of men The Roman haruspices inspected the Eingeweide, not the Kaldaunen, of the beasts sacrificed Kaldaunen is nearly related to Gedarme, for both signify the same parts of the animal body, the former, however, only in so far as they are prepared for food Hence the Gedarme of fish and birds are not called Kaldaunen, but Gedarme or Eingeweide. In scientific language Getrose is distinguished from Eingeweide and Gedarme as signifying properly only the mesentery or fatty wrinkled skin in the middle of the Gedarme; whereas Eingeweide signifies all the inner parts of the animal body, and Gedarme the canals containing the Getrose.

Figuratively we call any one kalt who is deficient in warmth of sentiment. Froſtig is that which excites no perceptibly agreeable feeling in others. Syn kampfen, fechten, ringen, streiten. When several persons mutually resist each other, they streiten together, and this may take place even by mere contradiction in words. They fechten when they endeavour to do one another bodily harm, the aim of the Fechter being to wound his adversary. Kampfen implies a greater exertion and expense of bodily strength; ringen, a most painful and persevering conflict, as instead of weapons the combatants only use their limbs, and the victory can only be won by the entire exhaustion of one or the other.

Syn. I Kraft, Vermögen, Stärke. Kraft actually produces the effect, Vermögen is capable of producing it. Kraft is active and operative, Vermögen can become so. Stärke is a determinate and more especially a higher degree of Kraft Stärke is the opposite to ſchwach or weak, Stärke to Schwächheit. A child even has a certain Kraft, otherwise it could do nothing, but it has as yet no Stärke.

Syn. II. kraftlos, unkraftig, ſchwach A thing is unkraftig when it fails to produce an effect, whatever may be the cause of the inefficiency; kraftlos and ſchwach, when the cause is want of force (Kraft). Kraftlos and ſchwach are used as well with reference to living as to inanimate objects; unkraftig is said only of the latter A thing may be unkraftig for any one and yet not be kraftlos. The kraftvollſte speech will be kraftlos for one who does not attentively listen to it The opposite to ſchwach is ſtark, as having a higher degree of force. The Schwache has no great degree of strength, but the Kraftloſe has none at all Any whole is called ſchwach from the fewness of its parts, and ſtark from their multiplicity The whole may, therefore, be ſchwach, though each single part is ſtark The army when composed of but few men is ſchwach, kraftlos when exhausted by long marches and fatigue

Syn. Lache, See (der), Pfuhl, Pfütze, Sumpf, Teich, Weiher A See is not only the largest inland standing water, but it may also have an outlet, and consequently be connected with rivers. Its water is, moreover, pure and is, for the most part, inhabited by different kinds of fish A Pfuhl is smaller than a See, and has no outlet; it is sometimes limpid, at other times turbid, and may or may not contain fish. A Pfütze is a smaller Pfuhl, which may disappear as easily as it is formed. A Sumpf is distinguished from the two last in having its waters over a soft soil which gives way under the feet. He who is not sure of his way in traversing a wood may easily stick fast in Sümpfen. In some boggy districts the Sümpfe do not dry up even in summer. Lache is peculiar to Upper Germany; its signification is the same as Pfuhl in Lower Germany. Teich and Weiher are distinguished from the rest as being artificial and destined as reservoirs for fish. Both, however, and especially the former, are often without fish and only serve as an embellishment to pleasure-grounds lä'cherlich, I. adj. 1. inclined to laugh; 2 laughable, ridiculous; II. adv. ridiculously; mir, ihm iſt — (zu Mut(h)e), I feel, he feels, as if I, he should laugh.

Syn. lächerlich, belachenswert(h), komiſch, poſſ(e)rlich, burleſk. The Belachenswert(h)e deserves to be laughed at, even if it should not always excite laughter. The Lächerliche is, properly, what really provokes laughter; it is, however, often confounded with belachenswert(h). The really Belachenswert(h)e should be the only source of the Lächerliche, but poets by humourous combinations and associations can often make things lächerlich which are not at all belachenswert(h). The Komiſche is the Lächerliche in action. Everything komiſch is therefore lächerlich, but everything lächerlich is not komiſch. The Poſſi(e)rliche (droll) is more especially the Lächerliche in gesture The monkey on account of his lächerlichen motions is a poſſi(e)rliches Thier (droll animal) Children, also, are poſſi(e)rlich, when in their games they imitate the serious manner of older persons The Burleske consists in a lächerlichen representation of what is great and important There is, however, a twofold sort of the Burlesken; vid Parodie, travesti(e)ren.

Syn Landeskind, Eingeborner, Einheimischer, Inländer, Eingesessener, Ansäßiger. He who has his usual abode in a country is einheimisch, he has his Heimat(h) (home) there. But with regard to a certain part of the country, as a town or village, we also call him who has his usual abode there einheimisch, though with reference to the entire country he is an Inländer. One is called an Eingesessener in as far as he belongs to a certain district of the government or the administrative distribution of a country. An Ansäßiger is one who possesses some landed property in the country An Eingeborner must have been born in the country An Ausländer may be an Einheimischer, but he can never be an Eingeborner in a country, however long he may have been einheimisch in it An Eingeborner, in so far as he has the rights and duties of a subject of the state, is a Landeskind.

Syn. Laster, Sünde, Verbrechen, Untugend. Die Sünde is the natural disposition of man toward evil. Eine Sünde or Verbrechen is any single immoral and culpable action. Laster is a proneness to culpable actions. A Verbrechen is a Sünde against the law, but a Verbrecher is not necessarily lasterhaft, for he may be hurried away by the heat of passion to commit a crime which the law must punish. Untugend is a lower degree of Laster; the former, however, may give rise to the latter. Mere bad habits, in which moral action is not at all considered, are also called Untugenden, as in children the Untugend of squinting, etc, in a horse that of shying, etc.

Syn. Laub, Blatt Blatter is said of all kinds of plants, Laub is peculiar only to trees. We say cabbage-Blatt as well as oak-Blatt. Flowers have Blätter, but no Laub. On trees Laub signifies collectively a great quantity of Blatter; Blatt, on the contrary, a single leaf. When the Laub falls off, the Blatter drop, and when trees get Laub, they get Blatter. Hence Laub has no plural.

Syn. I. leer, ledig. Leer is what contains nothing, ledig implies that a thing has contained or would contain something, but does not. A bottle is leer, because nothing is in it, it is ledig inasmuch as it can be filled. Leer, however, is used in both these senses. A place is ledig when no one possesses it who may hinder another from taking it. In speaking of incorporeal objects we can only use leer, and not ledig An ignorant man is called a leerer Kopf, and not a lediger Kopf. So we also say leere promises or words, and not ledige An unmarried person is called ledig, because no connection exists which hinders him from contracting marriage. In like manner any post that is vacant is called erledigt, a place or service ledig We say the throne is erledigt

Syn. II. leer, wüſte, öde. A place is leer from want of objects, wüſte, in as far as it cannot, on that account, be inhabited by man, and öde, when we find in it nothing that is useful or agreeable to him, more especially the absence of other human beings Bottles, dishes, pockets, boxes, etc , are leer when there is nothing more in them , a country lies wüſte when it is uninhabitable ; the cell of a nun is neither leer nor wüſte, but its inmate may find it öde when she seeks in vain for what alone could satisfy the yearnings of her heart.

Syn I. Leichtfertig, lose, mut(h)willig, verbuhlt. Those are leichtfertig who do not consider whether their pranks are hurtful to others or not Lose are those who somewhat outstep the proper bounds, or do things in joke or from malicious pleasure which they, at least, do not think wrong or hurtful. We say a loser, leichtfertiger boy, and the same also of a girl. Those are mut(h)willig who intend some injury by their freaks. Leichtfertig is, therefore, a lesser fault than mut(h)willig, although in common parlance the latter is often used for the former and without any bad accessory idea. Great reproach is implied when we call a female leichtfertig; this, however, may originate merely from Leichtsinn Verbuhlt is an epithet of still greater reproach

Syn II. Leichtsinnig, flatterhaft. Leichtsinnig indicates the inability to receive sufficiently strong impressions from objects with respect to their causes, flatterhaft with regard to their effects. A leichtsinniger man stakes what is of most importance to him, and forgets directly the greatest losses, because, from want of attention, the most important things make no impression on him An effect of this disposition is flatterhaftigkeit, or the rapidity with which a man hurries from one object of his choice to another.

Syn Liebling, Schoßkind, Günſtling. A Liebling is preferred to all others and has the first place in the affections of the person by whom he is beloved; a Schoßkind is the one most tenderly fostered and petted, often indeed more than is proper. Günſtling is one to whom another extends his special favour or Gunſt The Schoßkind is always a Liebling, but not inversely. The great and rich have their Günſtlinge, who sometimes are their Lieblinge. The poor man has no Günſtling, but he can have his Liebling, though it may be only among animals One is therefore the Günſtling of a superior, and the superior has an inferior for his Günſtling; one can, however, have a Liebling among one's equals and even among one's superiors

Syn. miet(h)en, dingen, pachten. Miet(h)en can take place for undetermined and different kinds of work, as well as for that of a different nature; dingen only for some determinate work. We miet(h)en a servant for domestic work, and verdingen the building of a house, etc. We, therefore, miet(h)en for a longer period, but dingen only for a short one. We pachten anything when we obtain by contract a right to the usufruct of a thing; we miet(h)en it when we acquire only its use. Thus we can pachten and miet(h)en one and the same garden; the first when we obtain a right to its produce, the latter when only that of living and walking in it.

Syn. Mittel, Weg, Werkzeug. Whatever is, or seems to be good for the attainment of any end is a Mittel; we call it a Weg when it consists in an action or actions. To get into an office by marriage is often the right Mittel, since it avails more than merit; but it is never the right Weg. A Werkzeug is something artificially contrived for a particular use; Mittel whatever is used for any end. A good physician knows the best Mittel by which his art can cure diseases, and a clever surgeon is able to use with skill different surgical Werkzeuge.

Syn. mut(h)maßen, vermut(h)en, meinen. Meinungen can have for their object dogmatical truths as well as facts; Mut(h)maßungen and Vermut(h)ungen only facts. Mut(h)maßen resembles meinen in so far as both are clearer; vermut(h)en may be in a high degree obscure. Hence presentiments belong to Vermut(h)ungen; they are merely obscure Vermut(h)ungen of something to come. Mut(h)maßungen, on the contrary, are not grounded in a mere feeling, the source of which is hid even from ourselves. Mut(h)maßungen are termed Conjecturen.
